The use of indigenous varieties provides significant insurance against pest due to the diversity, inherent hardiness and pest tolerance (through years of evolution) and it also serves to ensure that this valuable heritage of humankind is conserved for future generations. Most traditional crops are good contributors of micronutrients, protein and energy.